PRATAPGARH

Pratapgarh is one of the oldest districts of Uttar Pradesh that came into existence in 1858. It is at a height of 491m from sea level. It is also known as Belha Pratapgarh, the name Belha presumably being derived from the temple of Belha Bhawani on the bank of river Sai. Pratapgarh is one of the main producers of Amla in India. Nearest airport is Allahabad Airport located approximately 70 km away.

About the Conference

Indian Agriculture has been the primary source of livelihood for about 75 per cent of India's population. It plays a significant role in providing livelihood, ensuring food security and providing impetus to the growth of industries and service sectors as well as in rural areas development. Despite great progress in agricultural productivity in the past half-century, with crop and livestock productivity strongly driven by increased use of fertilizers, irrigation water, agricultural machinery, pesticides and land, it would be over-optimistic to assume that these relationships will remain linear in the future. Now government has done many structural changes in the economy for giving a new direction to India. It is a right time to throw the light also on the agriculture sector because this sector has demand of evaluation in a new paradigm without creating any disturbance in the environment, because sustainability is also a prime requirement of the economy.
